By Matthew Sanderson

Latitude 33 Planning and Engineering announced that it has promoted Katie Yee to chief relationship officer and Melissa Krause to associate principal. These promotions come as the firm is experiencing rapid growth, and recognizing the contributions of numerous staff members to the firm's success.

In her role, Yee, now a shareholder, will pursue new prospects and work to maintain positive client relationships. Internally, she will assist in the strategic planning and direction of the firm as well as focusing on shaping company culture.

Yee earned her bachelor's of science in psychology from San Diego State University, and is actively involved with Commercial Real Estate Women, The BIA, the Urban Land Institute and the Downtown San Diego Partnership.

Krause has taken the lead on building and maintaining relationships with the firm's public and private developer clients. She has spent the past 20 years successfully managing projects for large residential developers in San Diego County.

She will contribute to strategic planning, and be an integral part of the leadership team moving forward.

Krause earned her bachelor of science in history from Northern State University, and her masters degree in instructional technology from National University.
